STATEMENT OF RISK FACTORS

Any investment in a motion picture involves a high degree of risk and should not be made by anyone who cannot afford the loss of their entire investment. Before investing, the following factors should be carefully considered:

1. The success of any film depends largely on public taste and audience reception, both of which are unpredictable. As a result, it is impossible to guarantee the commercial success of The Challenge.
2. The performance of the film may be affected by external factors, including the release of competing films and broader economic conditions.
3. The entertainment industry is continuously evolving due to technological developments, mergers, and shifting consumer behavior, making it difficult to accurately predict revenue across theatrical releases and digital streaming platforms.

Shiloh Williamson Productions will represent the film and its investors' interests to the best of its ability, managing the project with care and making strategic decisions to mitigate financial and operational risks wherever possible.

Investors should understand that not all films recoup their initial costs, and that any investment in this project may result in partial or total loss.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Section One: The Film

The Challenge is a satirical thriller centered on a high-stakes reality competition in which six strangers are pushed to their limits for a chance to win ten million dollars. Blending tension with social commentary, the film explores themes of consumerism, media influence, and the commodification of human behavior. Its contained setting and ensemble-driven structure position it as both narratively compelling and commercially accessible.

Section Two: Financial Structure

The project is structured around a $3 million production budget, supported by a layered financing model designed to reduce investor risk. A significant portion of the budget is secured through non-recoupable or pre-arranged sources prior to equity investment, strengthening the project's financial foundation. The financial projections presented in this business plan across breakeven, moderate, and breakout scenarios demonstrate the film's potential to generate meaningful returns under varying market conditions.

Section Three: Marketing & Distribution

The film's marketing strategy is centered on a large-scale, interactive campaign that extends its core concept into a global, social media-driven competition. Designed to generate early audience engagement and potential virality, this approach supports increasing awareness and excitement leading up to theatrical release. Distribution will follow a hybrid model, beginning with presales and a targeted festival run, followed by limited theatrical release and expansion into digital and streaming platforms.

LOGLINE

Broadcast live to a studio audience, six volatile strangers are locked in a lavish estate and forced to confront how far they would go for ten million dollars.

SYNOPSIS

Television host TYLER REECE presides over The Ten Million Dollar Life and Death Challenge, a glossy, high-stakes reality program broadcast to a live studio audience, where six strangers are sealed inside a surveillance-packed house and told that only one will emerge alive with ten million dollars.

The contestants — BUCK, a former football player and bartender with a firm moral code; JUANITA, a charity-minded clinic volunteer; DANIEL, a mechanically gifted attorney; COURTNEY, an aspiring singer drawn by the promise of fame; RAYN, a thrill-seeking world traveler; and DARIUS, an intimidating entrepreneur — are introduced as both competitors and pawns within the elaborate spectacle.

Before entering the house, they must capture a rat to avoid a weapons search, allowing Juanita to secretly smuggle in a gun while the others are stripped of anything dangerous. Inside, paranoia escalates quickly as alliances form and collapse. Daniel attempts to gain an advantage by poisoning the others, while Buck resists participating in the violence.

The first death occurs when Juanita attempts to kill Courtney, but the struggle ends in her own accidental death. Rayn emerges as the most ruthless player, ultimately killing Daniel after surviving his attempt to trap her. Tyler escalates by releasing poisonous gas into Buck's room, which Buck narrowly survives. Rayn ultimately overpowers and kills Darius in the basement.

The final confrontation unfolds between Rayn and Courtney, leaving both critically wounded. Courtney is declared the winner and stumbles outside to a cheering crowd, only to collapse moments later as her mother accepts the prize on her behalf. Buck responds to Tyler's interview attempt by punching him and walking off set, while Tyler immediately returns to the broadcast to promote the next season — underscoring the film's commentary on consumerism, media desensitization to violence, and the commodification of human life.

CHARACTER BREAKDOWNS

BUCK

Buck is a physically imposing former football player who appears capable of the violence he encounters in The Challenge, yet consistently avoids engaging in it. His toughness masks a deeper insecurity, rooted in a lie about his past. In many ways, Buck is both the largest and the smallest in the room.

COURTNEY

Courtney enters the competition as a bright, conventionally attractive aspiring singer who feels perfectly suited for the limelight and attention that come with The Challenge. She presents as sweet, naive, and eager to be liked. After accidentally killing Juanita, Courtney's composure begins to fracture, revealing a side of herself far removed from her initial cutesy image.

RAYN

Rayn carries herself with a confidence that immediately sets her apart from the other contestants. Her attractiveness is perhaps less conventional than Courtney's but is more overtly seductive. Rayn establishes herself as The Challenge's most formidable competitor early on, manipulating her peers while reveling in the brutality of the game.

DISCLAIMER

While Buck functions as the film's central protagonist, The Challenge is driven by a strong ensemble, with particular emphasis on its female leads. Courtney and Rayn remain central through the film's final act, shaping the narrative in ways that are equally significant to Buck's arc. This emphasis informs the characters prioritized in the following talent considerations, comparables, and other materials featured throughout the remainder of this report.

DIRECTOR BREAKDOWN

The selection of potential directors for The Challenge is grounded in the film's satirical thriller framework, prioritizing filmmakers with demonstrated experience working within the thriller, horror, and satire genres.

A key consideration in this process was the ability to manage ensemble-driven narratives. The film's structure relies on shifting alliances and character dynamics to drive tension and progression, making experience with multi-character storytelling essential. Directors were selected on this basis - their ability to balance tone across genres, as well as their familiarity with handling female-driven narratives.

COMPS FOR THE CHALLENGE

The spreadsheet on the following page presents comparable films used to inform the revenue projections and market positioning for The Challenge.

TAX INCENTIVES & BUDGET STRUCTURE

PRODUCTION BUDGET: $3,000,000

FINANCIAL STRUCTURE BREAKDOWN

40% — Washington State Production Incentive $1,200,000

20% — International Presales $600,000

10% — Product Placement & Brand Integration $300,000

30% — Private Equity Investment $900,000

The financial structure for The Challenge is designed to minimize investor risk while leveraging available production incentives and market-driven financing strategies. Washington offers a base rebate of up to 30%, with an additional 10% bonus for productions that film in designated rural areas. Because the film takes place primarily on a secluded property, the production can be realistically based in a rural part of the state, qualifying for the full 40% incentive — resulting in an estimated $1.2 million returned to the production.

The project is positioned to secure approximately 20% of its budget through international presales, totaling $600,000. The film's contained thriller concept, ensemble cast potential, and commercially viable premise make it well-suited for international buyers. Attaching recognizable talent in lead roles or as director would further strengthen presale viability and allow for early territory sales prior to production.

An additional $300,000 is projected from product placement and brand integration. Given the film's structure as a televised competition, there is a clear opportunity to incorporate sponsored elements organically within the narrative — drawing from established industry models such as Transformers, which successfully integrated brand partnerships to offset production costs.

The remaining 30%, totaling $900,000, is financed through private equity investment. This layered approach ensures equity investors are entering a project where a significant portion of the budget is already supported by non-recoupable or pre-secured funds, making the investment more attractive and increasing the likelihood of recoupment.

SECTION THREE

MARKETING & DISTRIBUTION

MARKETING

The proposed marketing strategy for The Challenge is centered around a global, social media-driven competition, developed with the understanding that the marketing budget will reach at least double the $3M production budget. This allows for a more ambitious, high-impact campaign that prioritizes audience engagement over traditional promotion alone.

At the center of the campaign is a competition in which participants compete for a share of a $1 million prize pool. Structured across six continents to mirror the film's six contestants, the campaign invites audiences to engage directly with the film's core idea – shifting the question from how far would you go for ten million dollars, to how far would you go for one.

The campaign would live primarily on social media, supported by digital advertising and select traditional placements to expand reach and awareness. The goal is to create something participatory that also builds interest in the film.

The project also lends itself to brand partnerships and merchandise. In line with the film's themes, promotional materials could lean into exaggerated or overly branded aesthetics, intentionally blurring the line between satire and marketing. This allows the campaign to reflect the film's commentary on consumerism while also creating additional revenue opportunities.

DISTRIBUTION

The film will pursue a hybrid distribution strategy, beginning with international presales through key film markets to support the project's financing structure.

Festival strategy will focus on platforms that support thriller-driven storytelling and politically or socially conscious narratives, and on the highest end, will include SXSW, Sundance, and the Berlin International Film Festival.

The marketing campaign is designed to generate early audience engagement and momentum ahead of release, which can then be carried into the festival circuit. By building awareness and potential virality in advance, the film is better positioned to enter these spaces with an existing audience base rather than relying solely on festival discovery.

Following this, the film would move into a limited theatrical release to establish presence, before transitioning into transactional VOD (TVOD). It would then be positioned for a streaming release through an SVOD platform, allowing the film to reach a wider audience in the long run.
